“ About 6 years ago Malisa and I moved into our apartment building the same day as the first tenants after it was renovated. Shortly afterwards my car broke down. Malisa watched me walk off and come back about 3 times as I went back and forth to auto zone trying to troubleshoot the problem. On my 4th trip out she took pity, got in her 4runner, caught up with me, and offered me a ride. We were friends ever since. We had our moments as we were both hard-headed and spoke our minds, but fortunately, we also were open-minded and willing to listen. I loved the conversations she would have with my daughter and how she could relate to her health (which was rare). What I will always love most and always remember about Malisa was her ability to find the benefit of the doubt in ANY situation with anyone. What I will always be sad about was her inability to do the same for herself. Malisa was a rare, odd, but beautiful soul who will live forever in our hearts.
